Western University
OF HEALTH SCIENCES

College of Veterinary Medicine

CVM 7552 Selective Global Health Rotation

- The site must be an organization or veterinary establishment, staffed by at least licensed one veterinary, public health, or medical professional that is engaged in global health concerns, particularly animal and public health or humanitarian issues outside of the USA. The supervising Preceptor should have at least five years of experience in such a field. The Preceptor must possess extensive knowledge in the areas of endemic and epidemic disease control, epidemiology.
- The veterinarian, public health or medical professional (Preceptor) working in the field must work directly with the student and provide ongoing supervision, monitoring and feedback of the student's performance, with learning objectives and assessment documents provided by the college.
- If a Preceptor is certified through a foreign certification body, the certification process must demonstrate standards comparable to those of a US national certification body or program. If there is no comparable national certification body or program, approval is at the discretion of the Committee on Clinical Instruction (CCI).
- The caseload/activity level must be of an adequate number to provide a rich educational experience.
- There must be the presence of or access to appropriate diagnostic service components, physical facilities, medical records, operational policies and procedures, and animal housing facilities consistent with the mission of the site. If the practice is strictly ambulatory/mobile, there will be an exception made to requirements for animal housing.
- The site must provide a collaborative learning environment with student participation as a team member in the management of the patient (or patient/population), including the diagnostic and treatment plan based on signalment, history, physical examination findings, imaging studies, clinical pathology reports, and problem-oriented decision making.
- There must be reference resources available on-site either in electronic or paper form. If the practice is strictly ambulatory/mobile, reference material should be available in the ambulatory vehicle in either hard copy or electronic format.
- There must be no State Veterinary Licensing Board sanctions against the practice or clinician(s) in the practice.
- The site must maintain a current and clear premise license as required by state or local laws (if applicable).
